The life outcomes for adults living with FASD are generally very poor, but most research has been focused on adverse consequences in children. As such, “research is urgently needed to understand the long-term developmental trajectory of individuals with FASD” (Himmelreich et al, 2020, p. 191). The Changemakers are six adults living with FASD who are positive examples of adults who overcome obstacles and maximize their potential. Additionally, they develop and lead their own survey research to bring awareness and shift outcomes for adults with FASD. Their research is current, practical, and provides compelling data that educators’ efforts matter for students with FASD.
